

Cockatiel

Cockatiels are native to Australia. They are sexually dimorphic, which means that their coloring is different between males and females.

Males are overall gray with a yellow head and crest and a bright orange cheek patch. Females have a more gray head, less bright cheek patch and horizontal barring on the underside of the tail feathers.

