

Wilson's Plover

The Wilson's Plover is distinguished by its stout, dark bill and pale brown plumage. This bird exhibits a striking black band across its chest, a feature more pronounced in males. The females and juveniles display more muted coloring, blending seamlessly with sandy beaches where they forage for food. Adapted to coastal life, the Wilson's Plover's legs are pinkish, aiding in its camouflage among beach pebbles and shells.

See colors
and learn more

